Ajay is a fearless policeman while Vinay is a simpleton. One day Ajay's wife Maya who is a doctor, is kidnapped in their car by the dreaded gangster named Shivraj. Ajay attempts to save his wife but is severely injured. After waking up from his coma, Ajay comes to the conclusion that if he and his best friend Vinay don't work as a team, then there will be no saving of Maya's life. So with the help of Vinay, Ajay begins to train Vinay in police skills. The duo begin to do better in their jobs, but as they gain more experience, their friendship becomes strained. Dude, where's the problem? It's a freaking Bollywood movie. The whole thing is about people not being "nice" to each other. That's what makes it so fantastic. That's why we love it. "Don't be so nice all the time" they will say as they pick on each other for being a dick. That's when he says "But all you ever do is help people." That's how it works in the US, but not in India. And the main difference in India is that you're not allowed to fight. They are. They just don't get the attention that they are fighting for. In fact, in India, violence is often a sign of respect. There's a quote by Gandhiji that says that "Hatred is never vanquished by hatred. Hatred is never vanquished by hatred." And if you look at the Indian society, in fact, you'll find that in real life, fighting actually causes more harm to the one fighting. Your friend, you, is not the most frightening man in the world, and you wouldn't want to test it out. You can hear your wife's pleas, but you, the big dumb American, just want to keep coming at that guy, knowing that he's just a big dumb American and not a Hindu monkey god. There's an old saying "Don't be so nice all the time, every time." India is about people making mistakes, people trying to help people, people learning, people changing. You don't see that in the movies, because it's too hard to follow all the rules and you want to have a beer. I'll leave you with a question. In what movie can you find a Hollywood actor saying "I am a big dumb American, and I couldn't stop myself" 82157476af
